The Balvenie Copper Dog

Also known as a 'Dipping Dog' was once used by distillery workers to 'liberate' whisky from casks in the warehouse.

Made from copper tubing & tied to the belt, it was stored down the worker's trouser leg.

The dog was then dipped into casks & filled with whisky when the Exciseman's back was turned. The vessels were affectionately known as 'dogs' due to them being a man's best friend, kept on a lead & always by one's side.
